SOCIAL SECURITY NEWS

Unless disabled persons file claims for disability benefits by June 30, 1962, some workers with long-standing disabilities may lose all rights to social security benefits for themselves and for their families.

In addition to establishing total disability for gainful work, the law also requires the disabled claimant to have credit for at least 5 years work under social security out of the 10 year period before his disability occurred, in order to qualify for these disability benefits. A disability claim filed after June, 1962 is effective for "freeze" purposes only 18 months before the date the claim is filed. This means in those cases where the worker was disabled some years ago, for example, it could be impossible for him to meet this work requirement unless the claim is filed by June 30 this year. In some cases it could mean that the worker's social security protection could lapse completely, even for old-age or survivors benefits later on, particularly for younger workers. This is true since the worker's insured status for any type of benefit can be protected over long periods of time if he qualifies under the disability provisions.

Any totally disabled worker with at least 9 years social security credit in the 10 year period before he became disabled, and who has not yet done so, should contact his social security office promptly about filing a disability benefit claim. Disability benefits are now available to qualified workers at any age as well as to certain members of their families.

Complete information and assistance about these or any other federal social security matter are available every weekday, except Saturdays and national holidays at the social security istrict office, 112 Langhorne Road, Lynchburg, Va., or you may contact your local representative who will be at the Courthouse in Appomattox on the fourth Mnday of each month at 10:00 a.m.
